Anyone can learn to paint

A Gallery of Painters

"Anyone can learn to paint" is the motto of Crossroads Gallery owner Joan King.

King, an English major in college, swears that she couldn't paint up until four years ago when she took a private class with a friend. Now she owns a gallery at 394 E. C St., in which hang several portraits of her own creation.

In the back is a studio where hundreds of students have walked in as novices, learned the same technique she did and walked out artists, she said.

"You do not have to have talent to paint," she said firmly. "If you have a desire to paint, these teachers can teach you to paint."

"One of the biggest complaints we get from people is that they say, 'I've been taking art classes for three years and I can't paint,'" King said.

She said schools often concentrate on theory and composition and never get to the painting until later. At Crossroads students learn both at the same time.

The teachers that transform the neophytes into artists are all working artists in Southern California, King said.

"So, you say why are they teaching in a little hole in the wall in Upland?"

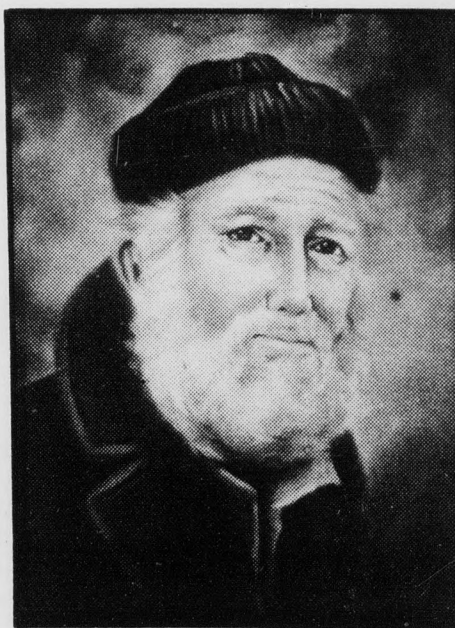

Because they don't always sell their work, so they need to earn their bread and butter," she said. "And we grab them."

Betty Hook, of Upland, is one of the artists King "grabbed." She works in oil, pastel and watercolor paints and has won many local and state contests, she said.

"I'm 66 years old and I think I've had a pen in my hand since I was a kid," she said.

Hook is mostly self-taught and began teaching others five years ago.

The studio holds only 12 easels, but in Hook's classes that can mean 12 different paintings she is monitoring. Unlike some teachers, Hook allows each student to pick his own subject: flowers, animals, outdoor scenes. Like Hook herself, they paint from photographs.

Students of Cathy Shefer of Alta Loma, on the other hand, learn to paint by copying one of Shefer's own works. "Occasionally Shefer will take her oil paints and go out into the wilderness to recreate it on paper, but most often she takes her camera and paints the scene later from her photographs, she said.

When customers in the gallery see her paintings hanging in Crossroads, some decide to take her classes to learn her style, she said.

In classes she emphasizes exact reproduction rather than artist's interpretation, so that the students' paintings will often turn out very much the same as hers. But room for uniqueness remains, she said.

"Everybody has their individual style. To somebody who didn't know art and style, they would look the same, but to us they look different," she explained.

Both Hook's and Shefer's students, as well as those of other teachers, have gone on to win awards, King said.

One of her favorite stories is that of an older woman who lived alone and was rarely visited by her children and grandchildren.

Most of her friends had died and the woman felt isolated. But she had always wanted to learn to paint. So she came to one of the Crossroads' classes and learned.

"Her whole life came together," King said. "Her life was worth living. She was no longer just a little old lady who lived in a mobile home. She was an artist." □

Christmas to fill the air in village

By Paula Monarez

The sounds of drums and bugles will fill the air; Santa Claus will arrive on a fire engine; and Christmas songs will greet one and all as the Upland Country Village celebrates its Christmas festival Dec. 5 and 6.

About 12 of the village's merchants, in conjunction with the United States Marine Corps Reserve, are sponsoring a Toys for Tots drive which will kick off with a two-day festival.

"We got together and we thought, what can we do to share our good fortune with other people," said June Tessier-Brown, who runs June's Gifts in the village. "So, we came up with Toys for Tots. We want to share the holiday spirit."

Merchants plan to make the festival an annual event, according to Tessier-Brown.

For the two-day celebration, shops in the center will hold open house during which shoppers can stroll through each store and drop off a new and unwrapped toy in the barrels.

The toys collected will go to children in the area who won't be as fortunate at Christmas time.

"We anticipate collecting about 2,000 toys," said B.J. Dolly, who works for the Toys for Tots organization. "But we want to be sure people understand the toys gathered will stay here for the children in this area."

At each shop, treats will be given or demonstrations will be held for the public.

June's Gifts will have a Christmas craft show, Tessier-Brown said.

Children will also be able to take a picture with Santa.

And Uncle Alligator, from Rax Restaurant, will be on hand to greet the youngsters.

In addition, there will be a number of bands, choirs and celebrities joining in the celebration.

On Dec. 5, the Pomona Valley Barber Shop Society and Chorus will sing for audiences. The next day the drum and bugle team from the U.S. Marine Corp at Twenty-nine Palms is expected to perform.

An antique car rally will be held on Dec. 6. Anyone interested in showing off his rare automobile should contact Jeff Thomsen, owner of the Foothill Chili Co., at 946-2279.

Although the festival lasts two days, toys will continue to be collected at the shops until Dec. 22, Dolly said.

The Upland Country Village is located 870 E. Foothill Blvd.

Officials say R.C. jail not sparred

By Patrick McGreevy

San Bernardino County officials said last week that the failure of a bond measure for jails and juvenile detention facilities will place all of the ambitious construction program on the back burner except the 800-bed jail proposed in Rancho Cucamonga.

Measure A on last week's countywide ballot received 135,480 "yes" votes, representing 59.6 percent of the total vote, and 91,509 "no" votes, representing 40.3 percent, according to the final semi-official tally by the San Bernardino County Registrar of Voters office.

The ballot measure needed to receive the favorable vote of 66.6 percent.

The measure would have authorized county officials to issue up to $160 million worth of bonds for the adult and juvenile detention facilities as well as an emergency operations center proposed at Rialto Airport.

The measure would also have authorized the county to create a special tax to be tacked on to property tax bills to finance the bond issues.

Officials say the county's adult and juvenile jail system is at capacity and is expected to need 2,000 more adult jail beds by the year 2005.

"We'll have to scale down the plans," said County Administrative Officer Harry Mays.

"It (the building program) will have to be on a more short-range, crisis planning scale which, of course, will be more costly," Mays said.

Projects proposed to be funded by Measure A that will now have to be placed on the back-burner, according to Mays, include a juvenile hall in the West Valley.

Mays said the jail proposed off Haven Avenue in Rancho Cucamonga must be funded some other way because the county has received $30 million in site-specific state grants to finance half of the project.

"It's imperative that we go with that project because if we tinker with it, we will lose it (the state grant)," Mays said.

The jail facility also must be built, despite Measure A's loss, because the county's existing jails are overcrowded and the county risks intervention by a federal court if it does not provide adequate space for the rapidly rising jail population.

Sheriff Floyd Tidwell said there is no question that additional jail facilities are desperately needed.

"But I don't control the money," he said. "We'll have to sit down with the (county) Board of Supervisors to figure out where we'll get the funding."

Measure A would have allowed the bond financing to be arranged next year for the jail.

Mays said the county will likely go ahead with a bond issue but will finance the repayment of the bonds with general fund revenue.

"It means general services programs will be competing with the repayment needs," he said.

The plan is still to have the jail built on county-owned land next to the Foothill Communities Law and Justice Center by 1990, he said.

The only other element of the package proposed in Measure A that may receive immediate funding is the centralization of radio communications dispatchers at Rialto, which may cost less than $1 million, Mays said. That proposal will have to be implemented without the more extensive buildings originally proposed.

"That also will have to be on the back burner," Mays said.

Tidwell said the ballot measure probably did not get sufficient support because the public did not understand the proposal enough. He said the county was limited in the campaigning or educational efforts it could have operated on behalf of the measure.

Election results wrought with dissatisfaction

By Mike Krapfl

There's a message of dissatisfaction in last week's Rancho Cucamonga City Council election results, several observers agreed.

Voters sent relative newcomer Deborah Brown to the council while keeping Chuck Buquet in office. In the city's first mayoral election, Dennis Stout won by a large margin.

Speaking of the council race, Councilwoman Pamela Wright said, "There was definitely a message there."

"The votes were spread out (among the eight candidates) all night long," she said. "I think that tells us the voters were dissatisfied with something in city government, but they weren't sure what, so the vote was pretty split."

To explain Brown's somewhat surprising victory, Wright said, "One of the more overwhelming messages I get from these results is that voters feel the need for a better balance between the good ol' boys of city politics and a more open government."

Councilman and Supervisor-elect John Mikels didn't comment on what Brown's election might mean, but did comment on the meaning of Richard Dahl's failed re-election attempt.

"The vote demonstrates that when you erode your political base by indiscretion like Dick did, the voters will let you know it," Mikels said. "They sent a message to Dick Dahl and all other candidates that to be re-elected you've got to do a good job."

That, he said, is what won re-election for Buquet.

"He ran a good campaign and did a good job while he was in office," Mikels said.

Jim Banks, a member of the Etiwanda Homeowners' Association and a follower of Rancho Cucamonga politics, said it was Buquet's campaign that won him the voters' nod.

"Chuck laid low and stayed out of the mud," Banks said. "That saved him."

Buquet agreed that his campaign helped him and that there was a message in his re-election.

"Rancho Cucamonga's voters are tired of dirty campaigns," he said.

"The voters looked at the various campaigns — some positive and some negative," Buquet said. "The positive ones floated to the top and they chose from those."

Bill Gass, the distant runner-up for the mayor's seat, also had a few words to say about the effect of mud on his campaign.

He said he wasn't surprised by his poor showing, "Because by the time The Daily Report got done slinging mud for the other candidate the voters had no other choice (but elect Stout)."

Other watchers of the mayoral race were surprised by Stout's margin.

Wright was one. She said she had no explanation for the 2-to-1 gap.

Mikels said Stout won handily because, "Dennis had the most professional campaign and the most dedicated workers."

Immediately following the election, Stout said the margin was because the voters realized, "A vote for me is a vote for quality in Rancho Cucamonga."

Rancho Cucamonga voters overwhelmingly opposed the county's plans to build an 800-bed jail behind the Foothill Law and Justice Center.

The vote, however, may not carry any message to county planners. It was advisory and the county is under no obligation to heed it.

San Bernardino County Sheriff Floyd Tidwell said he had no idea if the vote would change the county's plans. "It's all up to the politicians now."

Harry Mays, the county's administrative officer, said the jail is to be built with state money that is "site specific." If the county changes the location of the jail, the county could lose $30 million.

Jim Bailey stands proudly beside his classic 1936 Packard.

Development firm executive hits the road for enjoyment

By Mike Krapfl

Jim Bailey has the wherewithal to seek adventure in any of the world's greatest and most exotic ports of call.

Yet, the vice president of the William Lyon Co. recently traveled to Parker, Ariz., Goldsmith, Texas, and Arab, Ark., for what he calls the adventure of his life.

Bailey, his enthusiasm barely contained by the posh walls of his Rancho Cucamonga office, said, "It was just the greatest adventure to see the country along its back roads. The whole time I was proud to live in a country where I could do something like this."

The something Bailey referred to is cross-country road racing. It's something he tried for the first time earlier this fall and something he plans to do again.

In early September, Bailey and a group of friends left Laguna Niguel as competitors in the Challenge America Race. Their objective was to drive Bailey's 1936 Packard and a friend's 1949 Chevrolet over the fewest possible miles on their way to Atlanta.

Bailey made the trip in six

Upland eyes cogeneration to heat and cool buildings

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Upland may soon produce its own energy to heat and cool its city-owned buildings.

The city and the Southern California Gas Co. have agreed to split the costs of a $16,760 feasibility study for a cogeneration plant for City Hall, the library and Fire Station No. 1, Councilman Frank Carpenter said.

The plant would cost between $250,000 and $350,000, consultant James Moore estimated. He said the plant could save the city between $50,000 and $100,000 a year in energy costs within five years.

Moore's firm, Pacifica Energy Corp. of Diamond Bar, has done a similar study for Ontario and has built such a plant for Palm Springs, Moore said.

Although Upland's facility would only be one-twentieth the size of Palm Springs' cogeneration plant, Moore said it would be worthwhile.

"One big advantage the city of Upland has is that its civic center is so compact and it has air conditioning and heating systems that will tie in easily (with the new plant)," he said.

The gas company helps with the feasibility study because it will sell more natural gas to the city if the plant is built, Moore explained.

The city would buy the gas directly from the gas company at about 26 cents a therm rather than the 65 cents per therm it pays now for retail, he said.

Moore said that a single energy source would be used for two forms of energy: First it would generate electricity for its own use at a cost of 4 to 5 cents a kilowatt hour, compared to the more than 8 cents a kilowatt hour it pays now, he said.

Second, heat from the coolant and exhaust systems would be used to heat and cool the buildings, he said.

There's a slim chance that any excess electricity would be sold to Southern California Edison Co., he said. But the main goal is for the city complex to produce its own energy and save money rather than make money, he explained.

Although cogeneration has been used by European cities for many years it is only starting to catch on in this country, Moore said. A 1978 federal law requiring electric companies to purchase excess energy produced by cogeneration plants has helped spur more plants here, he said.

He described the electric companies as "reluctant partners" in cogeneration, although the Edison company is cooperative, he said.

"They don't have to build large (new) plants," he said, explaining cogeneration's advantage to Edison. "But it does displace some of their business."

Edison already purchases electricity from Upland's hydroelectric plant in San Antonio Heights, Carpenter said.

Upland lends hospital its name for $4.3 million bond refinancing

By Kimberly Heinrichs

The city of Upland has lent use of its name for a second time to refinance bonds for San Antonio Community Hospital.

City officials signed papers last week authorizing use of the city's name to refinance $4.3 million in bonds first issued in 1983, according to John Thompson, senior vice president-finance for the hospital.

Thompson said the hospital will save $265,000 yearly as a result. The original interest rates ran as high as about 9.9 percent, he said. The new issue will be at about 7.2 percent, or less, he added.

About $3 million of the original bonds were sold to finance the third floor nursing unit and cafeteria remodeling project, Thompson said. The remainder were sold to refinance earlier bonds which funded the hospital's two-story addition completed in March 1983. It included the intensive and coronary care units, he said.

City Council members insisted Monday that the hospital pay a $125,000 fee for the city's help, despite SACH Chief Executive Officer Ron Sackett's plea for a waiver.

The council had waived the fees for the original bond issue three years ago.

Sackett told the council that he has worked with many other cities and none of them charged the fee.

"I'm not aware of another city in Southern California that charges such a fee," he said.

However, City Manager Lee Travers said the fee is normal procedure when staff time is involved.

"It's a normal thing when you do lend your name for a tax-free (bond) issue," he said.

Sackett also discussed an arrangement with the city in which the hospital would instead spend the $125,000 to put in a wall and a cover on a storm drain on city property stretching from north of 11th Street to Foothill Boulevard.

But the council turned down that suggestion.

School principal implements innovative ideas

A smile is the only defense Donna Patrick will offer when asked about her somewhat unorthodox methods of operating a grade school.

But her eyes light up when she talks about being the engineer of her school's "Success Express." She says it "makes her day" to send "Sunshine Grams" to students. And she openly admits to playing a mean game of tetherball.

Needless to say, Donna Patrick has little trouble waking up for work in the morning.

After teaching in Pomona for 11 years, the Upland resident became principal of Covina's Cedargrove Elementary four years ago where she now implements an arsenal of creativity and involvement in her efforts to encourage learning.

"I'm not the principal of a building," she says in shedding the traditionally introverted skin of headmasters past. "I'm a principal of teachers and kids, and I want to be close to them."

Preferring a "positive" approach to education, Patrick is responsible for bringing a number of innovative programs to the Charter Oak District school.

Her "Success Express" program recognizes each month one to four students who have been successful in one area of education. Recipients receive ribbons at special assemblies and a letter of recognition is sent home with each honoree. The student's picture is then taken and joins Patrick's on a cardboard "Success Express" train that hangs on the Cedargrove cafeteria wall.

Patrick also checks every student's report card and sends "Sunshine Grams" home with children for random academic achievements. Students also receive "On-the-Spot" awards when teachers witness them engaging in socially constructive activities such as picking up trash, courtesy practices and returning lost items.

"I think it's important that kids know that I care about their progress," said Patrick. "We like to try and catch children doing something good rather than doing something bad."

Her other programs include the "Incentive Program," in which students can earn trips to Disneyland; "Grandparents Day," enabling grandparents to attend school with their grandchildren; "Docent Program," where parents volunteer their time to teach students specialized areas of education; and an improved physical education curriculum that earned 15 Cedargrove students Presidential Fitness Awards in 1986 (the school never had a single recipient before last year).

Patrick, whose husband, Bill, is head football coach at Montclair High School, said she strives to teach her students to "think out loud" by incorporating sound academics, social development and physical education as the basis of her staff's teaching foundation.

"I wouldn't be able to do what I do without such a good faculty. Our staff teaches our students to think out loud. It's a form of clinical teaching. The students are taught to identify a problem, then to brainstorm the solution, and then to analyze solution."

"We also greatly discourage fighting on campus," she added.

"We try to teach our students to say 'Please don't fight with me.' By doing so, the child is teaching a nice word like 'please' to someone who has just been mean to them."

"We are trying to teach these kids a way to solve problems without being physical. We want them to learn to use those minds."

The introduction of a new program at the school, the "Getty Project," is not attributed to Patrick. But Charter Oak Superintendent Michael Caston said she has played a major role in the district's implementation of the project.

"She's been instrumental in making it blossom in our district," Caston said. "She works closely with her teachers on it and has helped other principals in getting the project started at their schools."

The Getty Project, initiated by the late J. Paul Getty, is a five-year structured study in art appreciation for grade school students.

With the aid of 60 prints from masterpiece paintings, the program teaches children four disciplines of art appreciation — aesthetics, art criticism, art history and art production.

"Getty wanted kids to become art consumers," Patrick explained. "I'm really pleased with the enthusiasm that has been expressed by the kids on this project."

days and just under 2,400 miles. That earned him a second-place finish in the pre-World-War II class and $3,435. The 22 racers also raised $27,500 for the American Heart Association.

The race, however, wasn't a case of those ends justifying the the miles of means. The fun, Bailey said, was the driving and the people he met along the way.

"The most incredible part of the trip," Bailey said, "is when we stopped on an Indian reservation in south Arizona to ask for directions."

The two Arizona residents directed Bailey and his friends to a smooth, asphalt road. The road, Bailey recalled them saying, would save the drivers nine miles.

Bailey pulled out a photo album and said, "Well, as you can see, that road started out nice and smooth, then it turned to gravel, then to a brown road and then to two ruts heading toward the mountains west of El Paso."

"We kept driving," he said, "and went right up the mountain on dirt roads. Then, we came to a gate."

At the gate, he said, "We were told by some Indians 'that beyond this gate no road car had ever traveled.'" Only four-wheel-drives, off-road vehicles and horses had ventured through the rocky canyon beyond the gate, Bailey said.

Five hours and a creek-crossing later, Bailey's Packard left the mountain path and settled onto its asphalt element.

"We only went 5 mph through there," Bailey said, "but my tires — my beautiful white sidewalls — were all dinged up."

Then Bailey pointed out what was obviously the prize snapshot of his trip.

It was a photo he had taken from the passenger seat of the Packard while it hobbled through the canyon: it showed a hot desert sky over the red rocks and cliffs of the canyon, the Packard's long hood and silver hood ornament nosing toward both.

"Even now, I just can't get over that scene," Bailey said.

The scenic trail, however, cost him 15 miles rather than saving nine, Bailey said.

"I'm sure it was a setup," he said. "I'm sure those two guys are still laughing it up over beers at some little hangout in southern Arizona."

Bailey admitted that, "Some might think that adventures in expensive toys like the Packard are selfish, but I work hard and I've got to have some balance in my life. You bet I'm going to do it again." □

Council votes to revoke school's permit

By Kimberly Heinrichs

In a split decision the Upland City Council voted to revoke the permit of Carden Arbor View School last week.

After lengthy pleas from the attorney representing the school and a neighbor opposing it, the council voted to go ahead with the revocation of the private school's conditional use permit.

However, Tim Brayton, the school's attorney, said the council's decision would not be upheld in court.

The vote was based on the school's failure to construct a roof, finish landscaping and miscellaneous other requirements more than a year overdue.

"Since Sept. 21 of 1982 Carden Arbor has appeared before some city government people 14 times for extensions of time," Councilman Bob Nolan said in his motion to revoke the permit at the end of the semester in December.

"We have 15 private schools in the city of Upland. This seems to be the only school we are having that problem with," Nolan said.

Stating that he voted against allowing the school to locate at 1510 N. San Antonio Ave. in 1981 because its location in a residential neighborhood was inappropriate, Councilman Frank Carpenter seconded Nolan's motion.

"The problems of the last five years have borne out my concern," he said.

Mayor Richard Anderson said that despite enthusiastic promises from Brayton and a volunteer parent, he had to vote against the school.

"We've heard well-meaning promises for too long," he explained.

Councilman Al Canestro made an unsuccessful motion for an amendment allowing a 120-day stay for the school to complete the requirements, as recommended by the Planning Commission.

However, his motion failed when only Councilwoman Rosalie Kamansky voted with him.

The five-year long debate has irked both neighbors and school members, leading to sometimes emotional exchanges over the years.

Neighbor John McDonough finished his arguments against the school by stating, "our recommendation to this council is to take definitive action: Close Carden now and close it for good."

This prompted one school supporter to cry out "My God," and others to murmur. However, Anderson scolded the audience members for interrupting McDonough's speech.

The unphased attorney for the school, Brayton, told reporters that the council's action did not mean the school would necessarily close down.

"The council's action doesn't automatically revoke (the permit.) It enables the city attorney to file a lawsuit to compel us to close based upon the actions the council has taken," said Brayton, who also is president of the school's board of directors.

"We can file our own lawsuit to require the court to restrain the city from enforcement," he added.

Brayton said the school would go ahead with improvements as planned, and he said the bulk of the work should be completed by the time of a court hearing.

Using volunteer labor and donated materials, the school will install sprinklers and a trash bin and begin work on the roof by the end of December, he said.

Based on the school's $400,000 investment and the fact that the unfulfilled requirements are merely aesthetic, Brayton said Carden Arbor has a good chance of winning a court battle.

He said the school has been unable to complete the required work because of severe financial problems. However, recent volunteer efforts as well as financial relief have made completion possible, he said.

McDonough, who said he spoke for about 80 unhappy neighbors of the school, said he feared the school's newest plea for time would end up like the others: with a request for yet another extension.

McDonough has led opposition to the school since it first located near his home in 1981.

Marching Along The Beat

of the

Founder's Day Parade

Clowns, horses, bands and even bagpipes were in Rancho Cucamonga Saturday to help the city celebrate its heritage.

The ninth annual Founders' Day Parade attracted five-deep crowds of children, parents and passersby along Base Line Road.

The parade's attractions were many: The Alta Loma and Etiwanda High School bands joined 21 others from around Southern California in the 1½-mile, musical march down Base Line.

Aside from the music, there were 17 floats and 15 antique autos to catch the eye and carry the dignitaries.

Dignitaries included Bullwinkle, Rocky the flying squirrel and Dudley Do-right for the kids. Also on hand were Mayor-Elect Dennis Stout, Montclair Mayor Larry Rhinehart and county Supervisor Cal McElwain for the adults.

In addition to the high-stepping musicians, horses clicked their heels down the parade's route. Leading the whole thing was the Wrightwood Mounted Posse of the San Bernardino County Sheriff's Department.

Behind the horses, cleanup clowns cleaned up and did a little high stepping of their own.

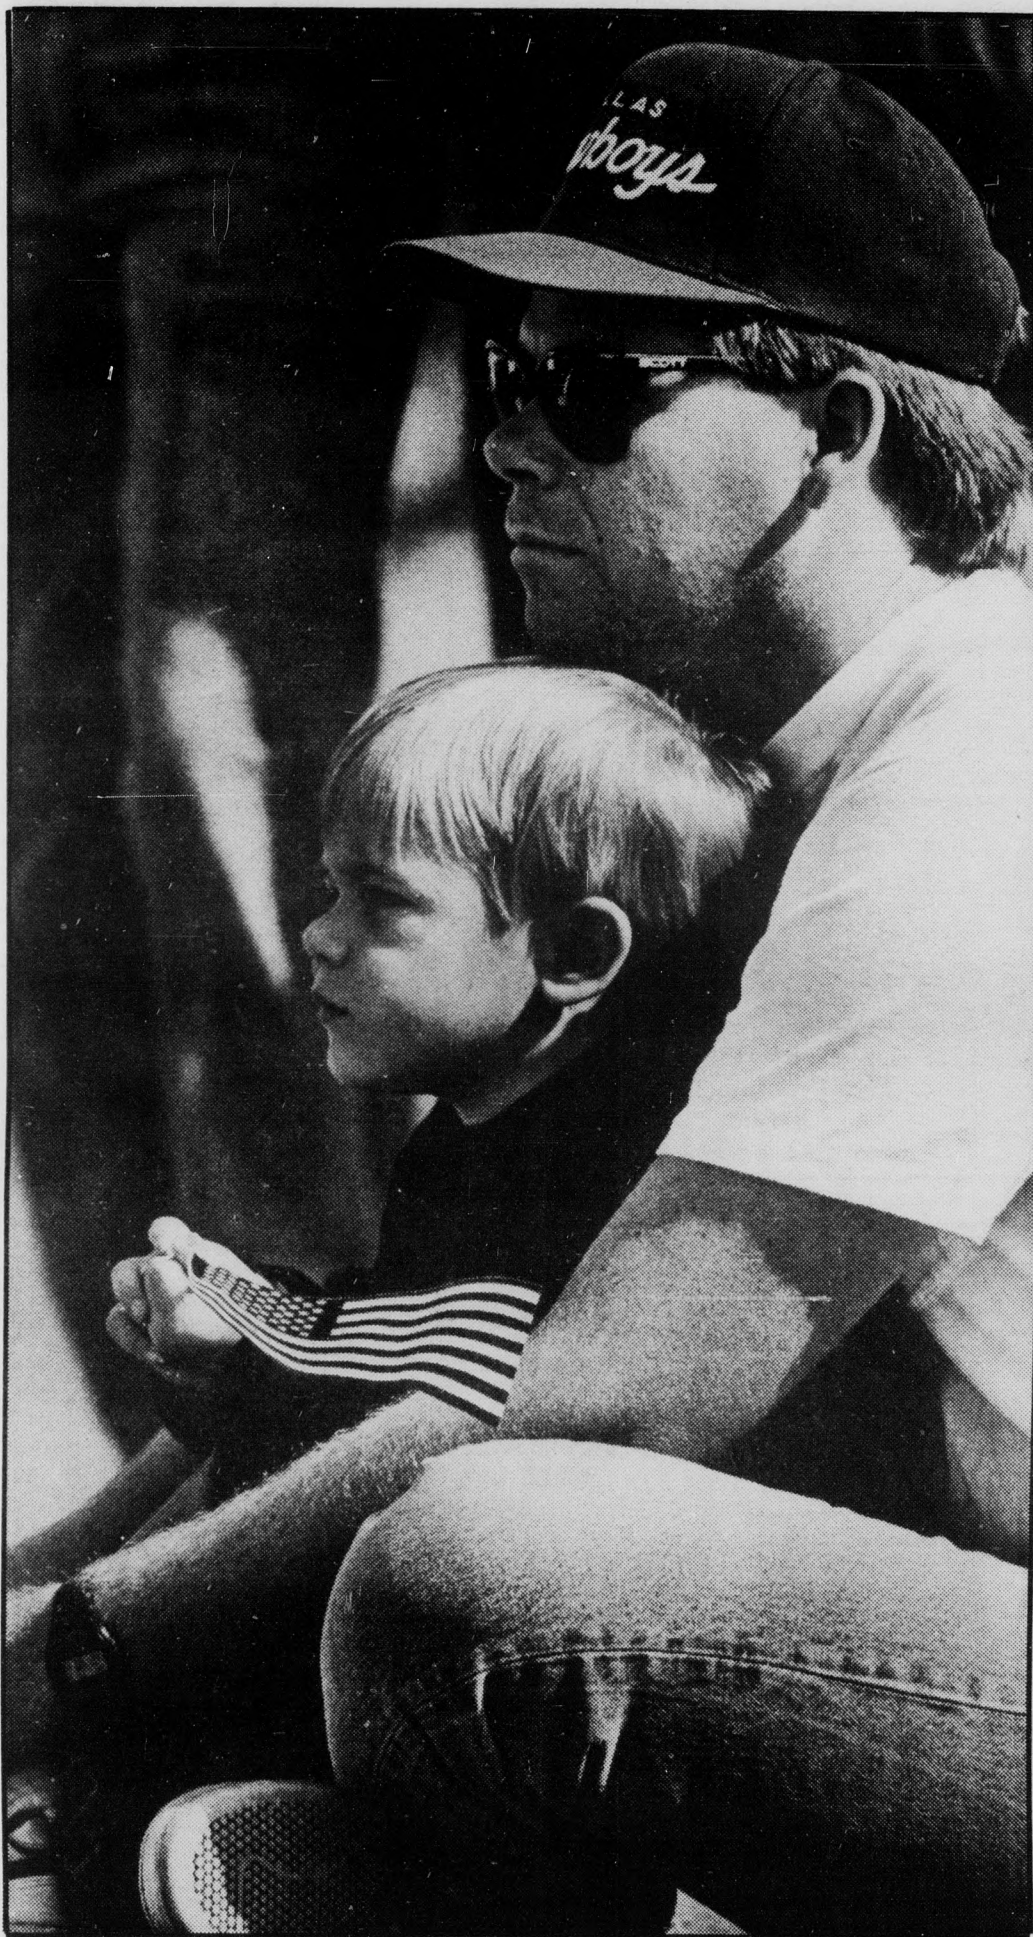

The parade, a two-hour affair, was designed to remind Rancho Cucamonga's citizens of the town's grape-growing heritage, according to Karen Matcham, the city's recreation supervisor.

Among the founders honored by the parade, are Tuburcio Tapia, who gave the name Cucamonga Rancho to 13,000 acres of sheep and cattle pasture he was granted by the Mexican government and John Rains, who subsequently bought the Rancho from Taipa's heirs and changed the area from cattle country into grape country.

Matcham said this year's parade, themed "A salute to the American Family," was "the biggest so far. I figure we had about 7,000 come out to watch last year's event and I'm sure we had more out this year."

Matcham said next year's parade promises to be even bigger. □

leagues weren't nearly so dainty: Jonathan Beyer shovels up after the parade's horses while Chris Shull holds the bucket (top photo).

Learn to protect self from thieves while traveling

By Leonard J. Hansen
Copley News Service

NEW YORK CITY — Let's set the stage. You're in a very busy airport — such as La Guardia in New York, — awaiting your baggage. Your most valuable items are in the case under your arm or between your feet, as you wait. It all sounds just fine.

That is, until "another traveler," a few feet away, trips and spills cash and other things on the floor. As a Good Samaritan, you step over to help the person retrieve the spilled items. At that time, your security has disappeared.

As you step over to help, the traveler's confederate grabs for your case of valuables. If you are a man, he grabs the wallet out of your back pocket, as you stoop to help. An accident? No. A ruse for robbery? You bet it is.

Or, as you are walking through that crowded airport scene, a freestanding sign declares, "Beware of pickpockets. Guard your valuables." Instinctively and without thinking, you check to see if your wallet is in place, that your handbag is closed properly or that the case with your valuables is still intact. By those actions, you have told the pickpocket or thief exactly where your valuable possessions are. He or she knows exactly what to grab at the soonest opportunity.

The examples are anecdotal — but they are true. Not just once or twice but many, to even hundreds of times a each day in places where travelers are congregated throughout the nations of the world.

The examples are cited by George Laughlin, a longtime police officer and detective with the New York Police Department. For more than 20 years, he also worked in a security department of American Express, where he supervised investigations into travelers' check and credit card theft, fraud and counterfeiting from offices in Boston, Las Vegas, Miami, Philadelphia, Washington, D.C., and Montreal. Laughlin retired from American Express in January 1986, but offered us tips on safety and security for mature adults.

As senior citizens are the most active pleasure travelers in the United States, you should exercise particular awareness to avoid the con man and thief.

What does the expert recommend? What do people need to watch out for when traveling — in terms of protecting yourself or belongings?

"Travel light," urges Laughlin. "Never pack valuables in your luggage. Before leaving on a trip, remove credit cards from your wallet, personal checks and valuables that won't be necessary or used on the trip.

"Always lock your bags and tag them on the inside and outside." Laughlin suggested that, instead of using your name and address on the bag tag, you might consider using your work address or a post office box, if possible, so no one could be alerted to the fact that you are out of town.

"Don't take more bags than you can comfortably handle." If you have six pieces of luggage and can only watch two, someone can walk away with the other four pieces.

"Take advantage of modern conveniences like travel checks and charge cards to minimize the amount of cash you need to carry.

"Don't keep all your valuables in one place. If two people are traveling together, split cash, credit cards, travel checks and personal checks between the two.

"Consider having a zipper or piece of Velcro sewn into a trouser pocket to protect the wallet. Wallets should never be carried in a hip pocket. Women might want to consider carrying money on their person and not in a handbag. She should carry a shoulder bag and tuck it under her arm, holding it securely by the strap," emphasizes the security expert.

"Write down the numbers of all charge cards, passports and travel checks and keep them separate from the actual items. Take the written procedures for reporting the loss of these documents with you, just in case."

With a number of hints given, the next questions are concerned with where, why and how a con man or thief might operate:

Q: Mr. Laughlin, what are some of the ways thieves and pickpockets operate?

A: One of the widespread techniques used is that of distraction-extraction. This can be employed in cases where the person is naturally distracted, such as being engaged in a conversation, or in a case where a distraction is set up. Money accidentally being dropped on the floor, a physical accident, shoving the victim or similar event.

Q: Do thieves look like thieves?

A: In most cases, no. They might look well-groomed and well-dressed, so they mix in crowds all the better. They might even look like the boy or girl next door.

Q: Why do crooks want to victimize travelers?

A: Pickpockets will work mainly where tourist and travelers are likely to be. For one reason, tourists and travelers often carry a lot of money. Criminals also prefer to victimize out-of-towners since most travelers are only around for a short time. If an arrest is made and the victim is not present to give testimony as a witness, the cases often are thrown out of court.

Q: What are your suggestions regarding hotel rooms?

A: Take your camera, jewelry and valuables with you or put them in the hotel safe when you go out. There is no place you can hide valuables that will fool an experienced hotel thief. Keep your room key in your pocket, on your person or leave it at the hotel desk when you go out. Thieves look for keys on restaurant tables and swimming pool lounge chairs.

Do not use the sign that says, "Please Make Up This Room," as it indicates that you are not in the room. This is an open invitation to a thief.

Always lock your room whether you're in or out. If your room has a double bolt and chain use them. The same thing applies to doors leading to patios, balconies and adjacent rooms.

Do not open the door unless you know the visitors. If your hotel key is missing, notify the hotel immediately.

Q: About travelers' checks?

A: Of course, I recommend the use of travelers' checks, such as American Express. If you have recorded the numbers separately and the checks are stolen, you can get replacements quickly. If cash is stolen, it is gone.

Should you not travel as a mature adult? This expert and others have urged senior citizens to continue traveling but to be particularly aware and avoid those circumstances that might prove advantageous to a pickpocket or thief.

You may request a free brochure on traveling safety by sending a self-addressed, stamped No. 10 business envelope to: TLR-Travelwise, 888 Seventh Ave., 26th Floor, New York, NY 10106.

Travel can be both a great adventure and a safe one.

He said that for five years the school has not complied with various aspects of its permit and has filed two lawsuits against the city to avoid compliance. The school only now is attempting to comply when threatened with revocation of its permit, he said.

"I abhor the idea that this council, my community, is being held hostage to last minute petitions, lawsuits and 12th hour constructions," added neighbor Alfred Bockman.

Past volunteer efforts at landscaping have ended in dead greenery, McDonough charged, adding that he feared similar results this time.

McDonough also questioned the school's advertisement for pre-kindergarten classes when it is not allowed to teach children under the age of four years and nine months.

"This doesn't in itself prove that such an enrollment exists, but a rational person would have to question why a business would advertise for something it is not authorized to provide," he said.

During the hearing, Nolan said he saw students attending the school on Saturday, which he said appears to be a violation of the conditional use permit.

Brayton said Carden Arbor rents the classrooms to an outside group.

City Attorney Don Maroney said that investigation of the matter would require a separate public hearing.

Ontario WorldFest volunteers needed

Ontario WorldFest Chairman Roni Zola, is "very excited about the number of volunteers we have to date," but adds, "We are going to need so many more."

Organization for the art and cultural festival scheduled for April 25 and 26 at Guasti Mansion is going into high gear and more volunteers are needed.

Workers are needed to help with site preparation, the booth committee, activities and entertainment, food and beverage, promotion and schools.

ENTERTAINMENT & DINING GUIDE

A plethora of motion picture magic offered

By David Elliott
Copley News Service

Openings

"SKY BANDITS" (PG) — A comedy adventure about two down-on-their-luck bank robbers in the fading days of the Wild West who join the Royal Air Force during World War I. With Scott McGinnis and Jeff Osterhage. Directed by Zorn Perisic.

Recent Releases

"CHILDREN OF A LESSER GOD" (R) — A genuinely moving drama, from the Mark Medoff play (he co-scripted), with two stunningly honest performances. Marlee Matlin is the deaf girl who is boiling inside with anger and self-doubt, and won't talk or read lips. But she "signs" beautifully, and those expressive, dancing hands give the movie a special dimension. William Hurt plays the devoted teacher who falls in love with her, and we watch them work out a very tricky relationship. We can feel their emotions heating up the story and lifting it above message movies. Randa Haines directed with tact and grace. (Good)

"THE COLOR OF MONEY" (R) — Paul Newman returns as

Eddie Felson, the pool wiz of "The Hustler," now 25 years older, cynical, and eager to corrupt for profit another young wiz (Tom Cruise). Directed strongly by Martin Scorsese, if not with his full, audacious talent, the film belongs to Newman. His performance is intensely internal, then comes out in steam jets of tension, anger and (as he becomes excited by the game again) revitalization. Cruise hot dogs his charm, but he holds his own as a rising star, and there is fine supporting work by Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, Helen Shaver and (as a young black hustler) Forest Whitaker. Some of the story (scripted mainly by Richard Price) seems pat and Scorsese seems to have been a shade bored by the ritual situation. But the film has a cold, brilliantly energized style, and Newman should get an Oscar, at last. (Good)

"CROCODILE DUNDEE" (PG-13) — An irresistibly enjoyable comedy about a suave macho man from the Australian

Outback who is hip and sassy enough to handle New York. Paul Hogan, the voice and face of Australia, stars as Dundee with a sure sense of his natural style. He's laid-back yet not boring, manly but not cloddish, amusing but not too coy about it. Linda Kozlowski is a spirited matchup as the New York reporter who learns to adore his masculinity. Hogan's script (he also produced) is fairly corny, but in a very viewable way, and the hero's foxy moves keep paying off. Directed by Peter Faiman. (Good)

"FROM BEYOND" (R) — A symptom of the probable death of the horror film, this is another adaptation of H.P. Lovecraft's fright fiction by director Stuart Gordon ("Re-Animator") whose film technique is radically rudimentary. There are showpiece nausea scenes, and sophomoric shock cuts (from a man vomiting to a cracking egg, for example). The effects of bodies turning to slime and erupting viscerally have a certain panache, but the only story cartilage is a spirit of campy gross-out — that is, nothing. With Jeffrey Combs, Ted Sorrell, Ken Foree and (as a psychiatrist who is brain-damaged into a taste for bondage outfits) Barbara Crampton. (Don't Waste Your Time)

"JUMPIN' JACK FLASH" (R)

— Four writers didn't do much to glue this silly thriller yarn together, but they're in luck: Whoopi Goldberg is the star, and her prancing energy and comic charm gives the film some shape. She plays a Wall Street computer operator who picks up a distress signal from a British spy lost in Russia. Liberating him, she frees herself from a dull life. Goldberg has some dumb scenes and resorts to some Stooging, but there is a kick to her presence. With a great yellow scarf trailing around her like a kite tail tied to her sunbeam smile, she overpowers the dopiness of the script. Penny Marshall directed. (Good)

"THE NAME OF THE ROSE"

(R) — Umberto Eco's novel, perhaps the longest scholarly footnote ever to become a fiction best-seller, is now a big, ludicrous movie. Manly Sean Connery is amusing as William, a 14th century Franciscan Sherlock who sleuths a series of murders at a vast, cold, dirty abbey full of ugly monks (they seem left over from the Dark Ages). F. Murray Abraham shows up to spike the fun as a cruel inquisitor — his eyes are burning pyres of fanaticism — and William Hickey is a "saint" who makes cute remarks about the Virgin Mary. Mud, blood, smoke, drizzle and dirty cowls — director Jean-Jacques Annaud films as if he were updating his prehistorics in "Quest for Fire." In the worst part, Valentina Vargas plays The Girl, who lives with rats down in the wine cellar and offers sexual services. She has one good nude scene; so do some corpses. (Fair)

"PEGGY SUE GOT MARRIED" (PG-13) — Hit-hungry Francis Coppola directed this film in a very safe way, and its cozy sentimental pull may deliver for him. But Kathleen Turner, for all her sincere effort, is not convincing as a woman, unhappily married, who at her high school reunion faints back to 1960. Though packed into tight sweaters and teen-doll dresses, Turner is too mature to pull off skittish '50s girliness. The character of Peggy Sue is not grounded; it's a floating concept or (even worse) a dream trip.

Cross country runners set for section finals

The West Valley's top cross country runners are set for the CIF Southern Section finals which are slated for Saturday at 8:30 a.m. at Mt. San Antonio College.

Last Saturday, what started as a promising day for area runners took a harsh and disappointing turn as just two teams and two individuals ran qualifying times for this week's meet.

The Upland boys and Chino girls teams advanced to their respective divisional finals, while Upland's Heather Watson and Ontario's Armando Huizar turned in qualifying individual efforts.

But for the most part it was a long day at the Walnut campus for locals, as the competition proved just too tough for the remaining 10 West Valley high school teams.

The top four teams and top four individual finishers from each prelim heat garnered spots in this week's finals.

Things went just about as expected for the Upland boys, as coach Bob Loney's team outdistanced everyone in their heat to advance to the 3A finals. The Highlanders, led by sophomore Pete Burk's second-place effort of 15:38, turned in a final team mark of 43 points, well ahead of runner-up La Habra's 52.

"We ran an excellent race — an excellent team race — today," said Loney. "We ran much better than maybe I should have expected based on the youth on this team."

Loney stressed the team effort involved in the Highlanders' success Saturday. And it was understandable, considering the fact that his top six runners finished in the first 17, including three in the top eight.

Behind the Scots' top two of sophomore Burk and junior David Hesseltine (sixth, 15:51) came sophomore Dan Galindo in eighth (16:11), senior Pete Richardson (13th, 16:28) and sophomore David Green (14th, 16:28) to complete the team scoring. Senior Scott Cleland (17th, 16:37) and Tim Perry (31st, 16:59) rounded out the Upland unit in Saturday's race.

"Danny and Pete (Richardson) have worked hard for us all year long," added Loney. "They don't get the attention Pete and David have, but they're there for us every week."

On the girls side, BL champion Chaffey fizzled after its big performance at the league finals. Monika Montiel, who boasted the second best individual time coming into her heat Saturday, wound up seventh in 19:49 while the Tigers took eighth as a team with 193 points.

"I don't know what to say except that we really didn't want to run today," said Chaffey coach Mike Arenas.

CIF football bids up for grabs

It's the time of the year when it's often tough to figure out which team is where in the race for high school football titles.

West Valley CIF playoff berths, for instance, are still unclear.

With a week to go in the 1986 regular season, the West Valley has a couple of easy and a couple of not-so-easy races to call.

Fontana, with its 16-8 win over Riverside Poly Friday night clinched at least a tie for the Citrus Belt League crown. Since they've beaten every other team in the league to this point, the Steelers will be the league's No. 1 representative.

Now things get a little more interesting. In the Baseline League, Damien has the locked playoff spot. With its 17-10 win over Upland Friday night, the Spartans claimed the outright league title.

On the other side, Chaffey, Pomona, Don Lugo and Alta Loma are through, although the Conquistadores can have a big impact on who finishes second and third in the league, Upland, Claremont or Glendora.

Despite its fine season, Upland theoretically could wind up needing a wildcard berth just to make the playoffs. This is how it works:

Upland, Claremont and Glendora are all 4-2 going into the final week. The Wolfpack and Tartans square off in the first key game and if the Tartans win, they'll finish second and Upland third regardless of what else happens.

Winless Panthers hit the road

Chaffey College continues its quest for a Southern California Athletic Conference football victory Saturday on the road against Los Angeles Valley College.

Losing does strange things to a head coach. Last Saturday night, Chaffey's Orest Stetkevich flipped his lid after the Panthers lost to Los Angeles Harbor 31-24.

"I've never seen so many mistakes in my life," Stetkevich screamed as his Panthers huddled around him on the field after they'd blown a 21-17 fourth-quarter lead. "It's not because we aren't practicing. It's because you guys don't want to do what the coaches tell you to do. You want to do your own thing out there."

After watching the Panthers' record fall to 0-5 in the Southern California Athletic Conference, Stetkevich roared for all the world to hear.

"I'm sick of losing and so should you be," the Panthers' head coach said as his players listened along with friends, families and probably people in cars driving by the campus on Haven Ave. "Until losing hurts you so much, so much, that you can't stand it — you won't start doing what you're told. It makes me sick. It's a joke!"

A joke? Yes. But, not the kind anyone in a Chaffey uniform would find very funny.

The Panthers fell to 0-5 in the SCAC while L.A. Harbor rose to 4-1. Chaffey led 7-0, fell behind 17-7, then rallied to lead 21-17 with 14:16 to play in the game.

Chaffey's John Pinto passed 54 yards to wide receiver Anthony Lardieri to set up a 1-yard touchdown run by Eric Stevens.

The 24-year-old Stanford University graduate trained with

"We're trying to shave down some time on their starts," said team manager Mary Ellen Fletcher. "The sports science department will be testing to find out what they're lacking in."

Troupe wants to spread musical joy

By Suzanne Sproul

Vaudeville, of sorts, is back in the West Valley or anywhere else an audience wants it.

The California Mobile Showcase is ready and more than willing to spread a little musical joy into the lives of those living in retirement centers, according to Jim Felix, group co-founder.

"My wife, Sally, really came up with the idea. About six months ago we were talking about how fortunate we are to have parents who can take care of themselves and don't have to live in retirement homes. And then my wife said it was sad that many retirement home residents never have a chance to go out for entertainment. That's when we decided to bring the entertainment to them," Felix said.

So the Felixes, who live in Pomona, and five others from Upland, Pomona, Hollywood and Palm Desert have put together a traveling road show.

One group member is a professional actress, but the rest simply enjoy community theater.

"All we want to do is bring a little sunshine into someone's life. We thought it would be something small but it has turned into a full-blown 1½-hour show. We sing songs from well-known musicals and perform scenes from known plays. We even do some of our own stuff," Felix said.

The group performed for the first time about a week ago in a Fountain Valley mobile home park.

"I guess they thought that since our name has the word 'mobile' in it that we only perform in mobile home parks. We're willing to go anywhere within reason to help people," he said.

Felix said several people already have inquired about the group's show.

"The word is starting to spread and we hope to be busy," he said.

The California Mobile

Showcase does charge a fee if a group is able to pay it. If not, the group will perform for free. The fee simply pays for equipment or sheet music, he said.

"We also charge those who can pay so we can give other shows away," Felix said.

"We really want to gear our efforts toward people who can't get out and don't have much activity in their lives. We want to reach out and touch these people, said Rick Simpson, who has performed for several years with The Gallery Theatre in Ontario.

"Acting has been a hobby for me, but it's something that I really love. This mobile show is something I'm really excited about."

Although entertaining others is the group's primary goal, Simpson said it also hopes to be a "showcase" for young artists, writers and musicians.

"Right now we need musicians, particularly those who have access to studios, but everyone's help would be appreciated," he said.

Anyone interested in contacting the group, can call 593-3997 or 623-5961.

Business group seeking young career nominees

The Foothill Valley Business and Professional Women's Organization of Rancho Cucamonga is accepting nominations for candidates to participate in the Young Careerist Program.

This program is BPW's way of recognizing accomplishments of young career women in the West Valley.

Successful candidates will represent Foothill Valley in a competition with other young careerists from other local organizations.

Interested candidates must complete application forms by Monday. For more information, call 981-1033 or 980-5388.

'Mainstreaming' helps child with learning disabilities

By Willard Abraham Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. Our son's teacher told me that he has a learning disability, and I believe it is so because of his difficulty with both reading and writing. Although he is 9 years old his reading of simple materials is slow and his writing is sometimes hard to figure out.

My husband says he is just plain dumb. He feels that the boy should be put into a special class for slow children. The school doesn't even have such classes because they try to keep children in regular ones even if they have some special problems.

Our boy receives help from a learning disability teacher who is concentrating on the reading and writing, and who feels he is making progress.

A. The area of specific learning disabilities relates to children who are average or above average in intelligence and who have such problems. They are not mentally retarded. Being taught in the regular classroom through "mainstreaming" as well as with the help of a resource teacher who has special skills provides one of the best combinations available.

Q. I've known for a number of years what a compulsive, exacting kind of person my husband is, but I've adjusted to him. I've made myself overlook how precise he is about everything.

However, now I've become aware that our son who is only 4 years old is just like his father. His toys have to be placed just so, his books are arranged exactly straight on the shelves, he never messes up his room, his drawers, his clothes or anything. It just doesn't seem natural.

Do you think this is something to worry about? Can I do anything about it?

A. It certainly isn't at all strange for children to have particular characteristics of their parents. They may acquire them genetically or by observation, imitating what they see.

You might want to make an effort to accept your boy as you have your husband, and derive some pleasure from the fact that his behavior actually could make him easy to live with.

However, both at home and in a preschool (if he attends one), your boy may be made comfortable about situations in which he is involved where all isn't in perfect order.

To true the perimeter of stitched-muslin polishing wheels after they get raggedy and misshapen, chuck a Surform Sanding Disc in your electric drill. With both the sanding disc and the wheel running, carefully bring the disc into contact with the wheel. The Surform's rotation should be opposite to that of the muslin wheel. Apply the Surform in short bursts so that it doesn't overheat.

To avoid making a mess when sharpening with waterstones, unroll an old plastic window shade over your work area. Two-faced sandpaper, produced by sticking two pieces of sandpaper back-to-back with double-sided tape, is easier to work with because it doesn't slip under your fingers. The double-faced paper will also stick to a sanding block if the pad area is covered with flannel cloth.
